Logline: Drawn back to his childhood home, James Pickens Jr. is Albert; a man trying to turn the page on long-buried pain. That's how he finds Greta, the current owner of his childhood home, keeper of his past and its hidden secrets.

Allies arrive in unexpected places.

Synopsis: Albert (Pickens) is drawn back to his childhood home on a quiet tree-lined street. Barefoot and seemingly lost, he encounters Greta (Eilis Cahill), the current owner of the house. As she tries to discern the level of truth, sanity, stability—or possible danger—she is facing, an old wound of Albert's past is revealed. Caught in the moment, he is grappling with whether or not redemption is possible when a reckoning is so long overdue.

Albert's Flower is a taut, heartfelt journey into a present relentlessly haunted by the past, and the courage required to face uncomfortable, unexpected truths about who we are and where we come from...those "flowers" that go untended in our lives.

Albert's Flower stars James Pickens, Jr. (Grey's Anatomy, 42, How Stella Got Her Groove Back) and introducing Eilis Cahill (Mind-Set, MAD); in a directorial-film-debut by award-winning theatre director James Glossman (This World of Tomorrow, co-written with Tom Hanks).

Director James Glossman's Statement:

What do we do with – what do we do about – the maddening, ungainly, exhausting, and sometimes ridiculous baggage we carry around with us, that hurts with every step we take; and at the same time makes us, for good and bad and in-between, who we actually are?

How on earth, even in the most infinite of worlds, did we somehow get here from back there – and more to the point:

What do we do NOW?

This is the question, the endlessly exciting dynamic – the Weight of the Past on the Present – that gets me up in the morning as an artist. And it is very much the central core of Albert's Flower. Am I the sum of each and every thing that has happened to me, or its hostage? Do we get second chances to make who we are? And more than this: Can the heart, once locked, find a working key?

An old man, at a stark turning point, heads straight back to a long-lost childhood street like it's a red-flashing homing beacon. Something has to happen, right here, right now, before it's too late.

Somebody else lives here now, several somebodies down the line, in the house he grew up in: a young woman raising her family on this weekday afternoon, who knows nothing of the past of this place, of the ground she lives on and its hidden, lost lives.

Can these two people – in this brief chamber piece, this desperately quiet 18-minute pas de deux on the edge of an emotional cliff – can they actually manage to see each other, to find a bridge across the chasm, before one of them tumbles over the edge in the dark?

Anyhow, that's the sealed box Albert's Flower is there to snap open.

Project Origination

from Director, James Glossman

In October of 2020, I was sent a new, ten-page play for the theatre by John Pietrowski, my friend since college. More recently, I'd worked with John, directing plays for him at Playwrights Theatre of New Jersey, of which he was the Producing Artistic Director. He decided to go get back to writing after many years as a producer. He asked me to read this short play, Albert's Flower, which he wrote, he told me, as a kind of exercise at the start of the MFA Playwriting program which he'd just began.

James Glossman & James Pickens Jr.

As soon as I read it, I called John to say that I loved it - this play with two people on a sidewalk - and would he be willing to let me do it as a benefit reading for a couple of regional theatres. This was after Covid lockdown had begun and actors were doing Zoom readings of plays - or outdoor performances with distanced actors and audience - to help keep otherwise closed nonprofit theatres all over the country alive.

I also asked if I could make one major change in the play as originally written: Instead of the play taking place in 1990, with Albert as a 19-year-old, wouldn't it enhance the power of the piece to place it right now, in the present, and with Albert a man in his late 60s...carrying the weight of his childhood trauma for decades?

from Director, James Glossman

John thought this was a fine idea, and I approached James Pickens Jr. about doing a benefit reading of the play. He read it and said: "I love this script, but I think it should be a film." Something that had never occurred to me, and I was immediately struck that he was absolutely right.

That was as far as we got at that time, however. Jim's TV series, Grey's Anatomy - shooting under tight Covid protocols - kept him in LA, and then once theatres were starting to reopen, I got very busy again as well.

Flash forward a couple of years: I was directing A Tailor Near Me, a new two-character comedy by Michael Tucker, at New Jersey Repertory Theatre, with James Pickens Jr. and Richard Kind, and somewhere in the first week of rehearsals in NYC, either Jim said to me, or I said to him - and we honestly can't remember which - "Hey, what about Albert's Flower? Let's do it!"

And that's when Chris Wright came on as Co-Executive Producer to help make the film possible; and then Eilis Cahill came down to Long Branch, New Jersey - where our play was running - for a table read with Jim, and to talk about how we would turn it into a film. It was obvious to us all that the chemistry was right...and we were off and running.
